

Hi Everyone,

Well I hope you all had a lovely weekend celebrating VE day. I had noticed on my walks that lots of people were decorating their houses with red, white and blue and on Friday there seemed to be an awful lot of people sitting on the street instead of in their lounges watching that big cuboid in the corner of the room with those flashing pictures on it. Anyway, they all seemed to be having a lovely time talking and singing with each other. Some people even played games. Mrs Long and her neighbours played Bingo. It wasn't as hard as the bingo she makes you play in class as it was just ordinary numbers not times tables, division facts and multiples of 10, pretty easy in fact. Despite this she didn't win, Freddie did and his prize was a bar of chocolate! Again nothing anyone was prepared to share with me.

This is a picture of us all waiting for the fun to start. Freddie, who you might remember is in the army, gave a toast to all the soldiers who gave their todays for our tomorrows, which was really lovely. Then everyone started talking at once and throwing my ball everywhere. (Have you noticed it was blue and red? Very patriotic I thought.) I was absolutely exhausted by the end of it, but aren't parties fun? It would be lovely to see some of your party pictures, I bet yours are much more exciting than ours are, you could put them of Seesaw.

Jackson sent Mrs Long a lovely picture of a sculpture in Towneley Park this week. It is actually up a tree, what do you think it is of? She thinks it's a fairy, but I don't, any ideas would be welcome.

Anyway, I am exhausted after all that partying and frivolity and I am glad that Mrs Long and Freddie have gone back to work so that the house is quieter and now I can get some serious snoozes in.

Until next week,

Your canine chum

Atticus
